Commercial law reaches into all sectors. It is at the core of every business. Today's increasingly regulated markets demand that operators manage commercial risk as they work towards their business objectives. Success depends on fruitful relationships with customers and suppliers, based on effective sector-specific contracts. Wherever you operate, your businesses needs the right legal advice and support, grounded in the context of your specific markets. Our multidisciplinary teams understand the cultural and business factors impacting your commercial arrangements.

At the beginning of 2020, COVID-19, known as coronavirus, has dominated global news and everyday life has changed immeasurably with some countries experiencing complete lock-downs and closed borders. This has caused sales to stagnate, the supply of goods to become difficult and an overall decline in the economy. Due to the unexpected and rapid outbreak of the virus, many companies are in need of legal advice as to how to continue to operate their day-to-day business activities in the circumstances and those that will follow.

The CMS commercial team is best known for its sector focus, experience in documenting new and complex business models, advising on restructuring commercial contracts, and its global reach. Our clients see us as business advisers rather than lawyers who just "paper" a deal. Whether you require advice on media or content deals, supply arrangements, services agreements, technology or telecommunications contracts, IP licensing, manufacturing agreements, consumer arrangements, software licensing, outsourcing, or any other bespoke commercial arrangement, we will help you achieve the optimum outcome for your business

If you would like to discuss the commercial opportunities and challenges facing your business, we would be delighted to speak with you.

Case studies
